YUMI BOTH

In her ongoing project Meta Maps, Yumi invites local residents to draw maps on their hands that lead to interesting places in their neighborhoods. She photographs the maps and then prints them to create actual maps that she and others then use to navigate the city. Yumi created the pieces presented here in 2008 as part of an exhibition called Surprisingly Natural, at the Bronx River Art Center. She asked residents of the neighborhood around the center to draw maps on their hands to hidden or little-known green spaces. One of the maps led her to a place where a husband and wife were keeping chickens and tending to a small urban garden, in what Yumi described as a median strip.
